

Summary of Google Street View and Internal Live View Image Collection Agreement: Key Provisions

- Google LLC and Transport Trading Limited (TTL) have entered into an agreement, which will enable Google to bring its Street View / Indoor Live View experience to the London underground (<https://www.google.com/streetview/>).
- The Agreement will have a two year initial term and thereafter is automatically renewable for 12 month periods.
- This Agreement grants Google the right to capture images and cartography (mapmaking) information in an agreed set of Transport for London's (TfL's) stations. A list of the TfL stations covered by this Agreement are set out below in Appendix A.
- Google will own all images and cartography information captured, which may be used in Google's products and services.
- Google is the sole controller of any personal data in the images and data captured, from the point of collection at the TfL station and during filming to publication of the Google Images/Data via the Google online platform. TTL has conducted its own data protection impact assessment.
- No payments will be made by Google or TTL in connection with the Agreement. Google is responsible for all reasonable costs associated with the filming.
- Google and TTL will work together to create signage for communicating the filming of the Indoor Live View experience to the public. TTL will be responsible for distribution of the signage. TTL may also issue any supplemental communications.
- Google will comply with TTL's property access rules and will avoid unreasonably interfering with TTL's normal business activities whilst filming.
- Google will not make the Google Images publicly available without TTL's consent.
- TTL also has the right to use Google's online tools to request take-down or blurring of Google Images.
- Other confidential legal provisions include: warranties, indemnity, liability, termination rights, mutual confidentiality, freedom of information rights, compliance obligations, and other boilerplate provisions.
